Dear [Recipient's Name],

As the moon hangs heavy over the cobblestone streets of Yharnam, I feel compelled to pen this letter in the eerie silence that envelops our beloved city. The night has brought forth whispers of beasts lurking in the shadows, and I can hear their mournful cries echoing through the fog. It is with great urgency that I reach out to you. The Hunt presses on relentlessly, and the blood of the innocent stains our hands. I seek your wisdom in these trying times, as we navigate the treacherous paths of our cursed fate. We must stand united against the encroaching darkness, or risk losing our humanity to the depths of madness.

Please, respond at your earliest convenience. We must gather the remnants of hope and forge a plan, lest we be consumed by the plague that ravages our kin. The blood ministration may be our only salvation, but we must tread carefully; the line between salvation and damnation grows ever thinner.

Yours in the pursuit of knowledge and survival,
